

Example starting prompt

Here are my rough notes for a new project. Some of it is organized, some is just stream of consciousness. Help me set up the project files.

CHARACTER — Sera

- Early 30s, grew up in a fishing village but left at 17
- Something happened with her brother. Not sure if he died or just disappeared. I keep going back and forth on this — leave it ambiguous for now
- She's practical, doesn't trust easily, bad at asking for help
- Has a scar on her left hand from a childhood accident (this matters later)
- She's been hired as a cartographer for an expedition she doesn't fully believe in

The merchant who hired her — haven't named him yet — he's charming but I don't trust him as a character. He knows more than he lets on. Older, maybe 60s, walks with a cane. Calls everyone "friend."

WORLD / SETTING

The Ashfeld — a region where old wars left the land fractured. Not literally broken, more like... the political boundaries are all wrong because of how borders were redrawn after a series of treaties nobody actually agreed with. Pockets of contested land everywhere.

The city where the story starts is called Vethara. It's a port city, very layered — rich district up on the cliffs, working district at the waterfront, and the old city underneath that which is technically ruins but people still live in it. The old city is important. I want it to feel like sediment.

random thought — there's a navigation instrument that only works near ley lines or magical currents or something like that. Sera would have one but not know what it actually does. It just behaves strangely. Could tie into the brother thing.

the expedition is looking for something but I haven't decided what. Maybe a place, maybe a person. Leave the destination blank for now.

Create whatever files make sense. Flag anything that seems contradictory or that I should decide before going further.

Also I want to add some research notes. Please research what I need to know about Ashfeld and add them in the files